Chief- last year some of you were not sure what a police chief does. In a recent article in American Police Beat should give some a good idea. It shows the all-around job not necessarily the day to day. Took several days of vacation and attended training in Human Trafficking in Elkhorn

Chiefs Pay the Price

For many law enforcement leaders, the work is intense and the risks ever present

by Nicholas Breul

The title of Chief of Police carries the challenge of being not only the visible head of an agency or department, but the person responsible for managing that department's budget, personnel, resources, as well as answering to the political structure of the municipality or county in which they serve.

In the larger law enforcement agencies, the Chief has subordinates such as assistant and deputy chiefs who handle many of the day-to-day operations while the Chief develops strategy, manages personnel, makes public appearances, and presides over hundreds of matters that constantly need their attention.

In larger law enforcement agencies, the chief is not usually on the street patrolling, answering calls or backing up their officers.

In the larger agencies, it is rare to see even a captain out doing the "boots on the ground" police work.

However, smaller agency chiefs have to do it all.

They make budget decisions, testify before their city council, respond to media inquiries and often directly supervise their department personnel.

It is not unusual for these chiefs to handle calls for service, assist an officer or to come in from home to manage an important investigation.

For Abilene, Kansas Chief Thomas J. Smith, performing double duties was not unusual - Smith also served as a City Marshal. Back in the 1800s, Marshals were often called "town marshals" or "city marshals" since the larger cities were often punctilious about titles.

The marshals were appointed or elected police officers of small communities, with powers and duties similar to those of a police chief. These powers ended at the border of the community.

Chief Smith had only been on the job for five months when, on November 2, 1870, he was shot and killed while attempting to serve an arrest warrant.

In addition to serving as the chief, he also held a commission as a United States Marshal.

Forty-five years later, Weymouth, Massachusetts Police Chief Patrick Butler became one of the first-known chiefs to be killed when he was struck by a drunk driver on April 15, 1915.

Chief Butler was on his way to work when he saw a vehicle approaching with its headlights off. As he stepped into the street signaling for the driver to stop the drunk driver struck Chief Butler.

He was transported home by two of his children, where he died of a fractured skull and broken back. The motorist was arrested and charged with manslaughter.

Since that time, the names of hundreds more Chiefs of Police have been added to the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial in Washington, DC.

In January of 2011, Rainier, Oregon Police Chief Ralph Arthur Painter was shot and killed while responding to a disturbance call at a car audio shop.

He confronted a man who may have been under the influence of drugs and was attempting to steal a car.

A struggle ensued and Chief Painter was disarmed and shot with his own weapon.

The use of an officer's duty weapon against them is an issue that continues to plague law enforcement and demonstrates that weapon retention is still a concern.

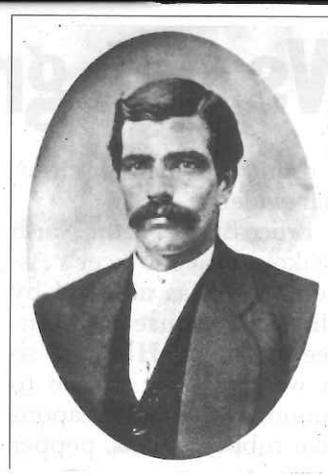

Chief Painter was killed protecting his community and responding to a call for help. He was like so many other small town Chiefs who serve on both the front lines and in the front office.

In March of 2013, Chief Randy Junior Boykin of the Enterprise (MS) Police Department was killed while doing one of the most common jobs a police officer can do.

He was directing traffic outside a high school. His cruiser lights were activated and he was wearing a visibility vest as he managed the traffic flow, but, despite these precautions, he was struck and killed by a small passenger van.

Struck-by incidents such as these are another area of concern for police officers who are on our busy roadways investigating crashes and pulling vehicles over. Three of the Chiefs who died in the traffic-related crashes recounted earlier were killed in single vehicle crashes. Crashes are another important area of focus, where the data indicates that more than half involve a single vehicle. In most of these cases, the reports provide little insight as to why “the vehicle left the roadway,” while some cite speed and overcorrecting as contributing factors.

Sadly, many of these crashes occur while the officers were not on a priority call but on patrol or en route to an administrative assignment.

Chiefs are perhaps even more vulnerable to the stressors of the job as they handle so much. They are hit from all sides on any number of issues, work long hours, are often trying to

Many of them died while performing the same duties handled by the officers they oversaw.

These chiefs were exposed and subjected to the same dangers that patrol officers face daily, and many of them died as a result of the same circumstances that have taken officers’ lives.

Of the 15 chiefs who died between 2010 and 2014, five were shot and killed, four died from a heart-related ailments, four died in vehicle crashes, one was killed when struck by a van and another died as a result of a fall.

NLEOMF studying law enforcement deaths

Through a grant from the Department of Justice’s Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) office, the Memorial Fund’s Officer Safety and Wellness

Department is compiling and analyzing data covering a recent five-year span of fatalities in order to pinpoint the commonalities and identify potential patterns in situations that resulted in an officer being killed in the line of duty.

This work involves reviewing all documents related to each case during the period to understand the call for service and the circumstances involved in each fatality.

The goal of this effort is to identify reoccurring tendencies and risk factors that were common elements in the fatalities and to increase awareness of those potential dangers.

Preliminary research shows that Chiefs are not immune to the same foibles and dangers that their officers are.

When the research phase is finished, the Memorial Fund will publish a detailed report of the findings and distribute it throughout the law enforcement community.

Chiefs have a difficult job, and many serve right alongside their officers and can be the same victims of violence, crashes, and stress.

All of the same elements that affect an officer can impact a chief of police regardless of the size agency they manage.

Thus, it is important for chiefs to recognize their vulnerabilities, set the example, and take their own safety, as well as that of the officers they supervise, to heart.

Nicholas Breul is the Senior Director of Officer Safety and Wellness at the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial Fund. Visit www.LawMemorial.org for more information.

Of these, 599 held the title of Chief of Police.

More recently, the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial Fund (NLEOMF) has memorialized 15 chiefs of police who died in the line of duty since 2010.

Waterford man pleads guilty to child enticement

Barnak faces up to 25 years in prison and $100,000 in fines

By Tracy Ouellette
EDITOR

James Barnak, the 75-year-old Waterford man charged the repeated sexual assault, false imprisonment and strangulation and suffocation of a 14-year-old East Troy girl in November of 2014, pleaded guilty to child enticement, causing mental and/or bodily harm on Oct. 1 in Walworth County Circuit Court.

Barnak was charged with four felonies in Walworth County Circuit Court on Nov. 12, 2014. Those charges included child enticement, a Class D felony; child sexual exploitation, a Class C felony; false imprisonment, a Class H felony; and strangulation and suffocation, a Class H felony.

Barnak had been scheduled to go to trial in Walworth County on Oct. 5, but a plea agreement was reached Oct. 1, Village of East Troy Police Chief Alan Boyes said.

The guilty plea on the Class D felony means Barnak is facing up to 25 years in prison and/or $100,000 in fines. Barnak will appear in Walworth Court on Nov. 20 for sentencing.

Barnak was charged with a Class C felony for at least three alleged violations of first- or second-degree sexual assault in Racine County Court on Nov. 11, 2014. The Racine County charges are still pending.

Barnak is scheduled to appear in Racine County Court at 8:30 a.m. on Oct. 27 for a status conference in that case.

In the Walworth County criminal complaint filed in November 2014, the victim alleged Barnak had been touching her inappropriately at his home in Waterford since she was 8 or 9 years old, including touching her breasts and pelvic area. The complaint detailed accounts of inappropriate touching, suggestive photography, including a video, and instances where she was tied up, gagged and choked until the point she thought she would pass out, among other things.

When interviewed, Barnak admitted to tying up the victim at her home in East Troy Nov. 7, blindfolding her eyes, taking photos of her, asking her to remove her clothing and grabbing her around the neck and squeezing, according to the criminal complaint.

Barnak also admitted to investigators that he targeted the child because she was vulnerable due to her family situation, according to the complaint.

Barnak stated that he knew what he was doing was wrong, according to the Racine County complaint.

Court records show Barnak's wife filed for divorce in February. The divorce was finalized in August. Court records also show a Jane Doe civil lawsuit was filed against Barnak in January on behalf of an unnamed minor and the minor's mother.

Milwaukee man to be arraigned in fatal crash

By Vicky Wedig
STAFF WRITER

A Milwaukee man is scheduled to be arraigned Nov. 20 on felony charges in connection with a Sept. 12 crash in East Troy that killed a motorcyclist.

Andrew Carroll, 19, was charged Sept. 15 in Walworth County Circuit Court with second-degree reckless homicide; knowingly operating a motor vehicle without a valid license, causing death; and two counts of first-degree recklessly endangering safety.

Carroll was allegedly driving from Whitewater to Milwaukee after a night of drinking beer and smoking marijuana when he veered into the oncoming lane of traffic on Highway 20 at Division Street and caused a collision that resulted in the sport utility vehicle and a motorcycle catching fire. The crash killed Andrew T. Pearson, 43, and injured his wife, Antrea Pearson, who were on the motorcycle that caught fire, according to the criminal complaint.

Andrew Pearson was dead at the scene, and Antrea Pearson was taken to Froedtert Hospital in Wauwatosa with a broken left arm and leg, according to the complaint.

Another motorcyclist, Jeffrey G. Marker, was taken to Waukesha Memorial Hospital with a broken pelvis and a fracture at the base of his skull, according to the complaint.

Carroll did not have a valid driver's license and said he fell asleep while driving.
